ABOUT THE CITY.

John Brozevich, who was killed by a train in the Montana Union yards here, was buried yesterday. A large number of his countrymen attended the funeral.

Marcus Daly returned to this city last night from the South, where he has been spending several weeks. Traffic Manager Donohue also returned with Mr. Daly.

At its meeting on Saturday evening the board of education decided to build a temporary one-room school house to relieve the crowded condition of the Fourth ward school house.

Matt Byrnes, the great horseman of Eatontown, N. J., arrived in Anaconda last night and is at the Montana, the guest of Marcus Daly. Mr. Byrnes will visit Riverside, where he will spend a few days in company with Andy McDowell and other kindred spirits who love the thoroughbred.

Rev. Dr. Tower, president of the Montana University, preached two eloquent sermons in the M. E. church yesterday. To-night Dr. Tower will deliver a lecture in the M. E. church on the subject of "Pluck vs. Luck." He is an eloquent and very entertaining speaker, and those who attend this lecture will undoubtedly enjoy it.

Some of these times there will be a fire over in the city jail and the life of every one who is in the place at that hour will be sacrificed. There is no power in this city that could save those confined in that pen if a fire should start in the front of the building where the stove stands. And a fire is liable to occur at any hour at that place.

John R. Gumb, formerly a resident of this city and leader of the Anaconda brass band, has returned after a successful season in Seattle and British Columbia. Mr. Gumb is a noted cornetist, and, possessing executive as well as musical ability, would be an excellent man to reorganize a band for this city. The needs of such an organization is apparent to all citizens.

Dan O'Leary, the great pedestrian, arrived in Anaconda from Granite last night, having walked every foot of the distance. He left Granite about 9 o'clock yesterday morning and arrived here at 7 o'clock last evening a very tired man. He undertook the walk because he thought it would do him good, but he found the snow too deep on the hills and the walking was very tiresome. Mr. O'Leary won a race in the skating rink at Granite on Saturday night. He defeated a man named Al Simpson who attempted to run three miles while O'Leary was walking two miles, square heel and toe. Dan won by about 50 yards, walking the two miles in the remarkably good time of 15 minutes and 45 seconds. O'Leary says Simpson is a wonderfully fast sprinter and if properly handled would be one of the fastest short distance pedestrians in America. Mr. O'Leary will remain in Anaconda for some time. He has the agency for the great publishing house of P. F. Collier and Dan will try his hand at selling books in the Copper City. He will make many a sale to people who admire him as a plucky and worthy gentleman.

Two young Austrians attended John Brozevich's funeral yesterday afternoon and now they are sorry for it. They drove a fine horse, the property of French, the livery stable keeper. On the way home from the cemetery their young blood became warm and they longed for excitement. They engaged in a horse race with another grief-stricken neighbor, and there was plenty of fun until the sutter occupied by the first mentioned pair struck a lamp post on Third street and the occupants were pitched out. One of the fellows plowed up the sidewalk with his cheek; it took two doctors an hour to pull the pieces of board out of his features. The other fellow, when picked up, didn't have as much life in him as the corpse he had just assisted in burying. A piece of his ear couldn't be found, but his teeth were safely stored away in his stomach. In general, he presented the appearance of a "subject" that had spent 10 nights in the dissecting room of a medical college. The pair were taken in for repairs. When they recovered sufficiently to stand the shock Mr. French will present a bill for about $200 for damage to his turnout.

THE LOAFERS' CLUB.

Its Members are Not for Reform in Certain Quarters.

The little back room where a cheerful aspect last night as the members of the Loafers' club dropped in, after the close of the evening services at the churches, for the regular session. They looked cheerful and had the characteristic appearance of philanthropists. The face of the president beamed with good will and peace as he rose to call the meeting to order, and the expression was reflected from every face in the room, except that of the Jowler, who is generally disturbed on Sunday evening by his conscience.

"Gentlemen," said the president, "I congratulate you upon the favorable impression which has been made by the Society for Local Reform, and upon the encouraging words which have greeted our first attempt at reform. I trust that, as spring advances, we may find that our efforts have not been in vain, and that the streets of our city will be kept in better condition than they have heretofore. To that end let us labor. We must have it distinctly understood that this society is not a political club, but that its sole aim is to improve our city morally, intellectually and otherwise. Let us work harmoniously and we'll be happy. We have three new members to-night, who will be of great assistance to us in carrying on our good work. You are acquainted with them all and will welcome them to our ranks. I introduce to you the Robber, the Yankee and the Savant."

The new members were enthusiastically received and were at once initiated into the club. Like Micky, the Robber is a native of Canada, and like him, is a gentleman and a sportsman. He is full of "Montreal tricks" and is an expert at "beating the house." It is his boast that "you don't" stick me very often." Not content with the successive afflictions of having been born in Canada, having to pay duty on his clothing when he emigrated, and having his private stock of wines invaded by a gay deceiver while he was away, he is still seeking trouble and is trying to speak German.

The Savant is a respected member of the same profession as the Robber, and, like him, is ambitious to beat the house, but he is continually "hoodooed." The Yankee is a production of New England, with a predilection for baked beans and pretty girls. He is highly successful with both and is a very aesthetic young man. His bright smile and gay caravat carry all before them and he is a very popular chap. His presence at the club was particularly welcome. After the ceremonies of initiation were over, the sport stopped to the rostrum and unrolled a lengthy manuscript. He announced that, his turn having arrived to deliver the regular address, he would speak to the club upon the evils of monopolies.

"I am not going to discuss the question of monopolies in general," said he. "It is not within the province of this society to attempt to do away with the telegraph monopoly, nor to trifle with the eastern freight rates. We will not attack Jay Gould, nor will we meddle with the affairs of the Vanderbilts."

"But there is flourishing in this city, winked at by law, and disregarded by the authorities, a monopoly more disgraceful, a traffic more heinous than trust or combine. Right here in our midst, in sight of boys and girls who are growing up in our city, this vile practice is going on unchecked. While it is not in our power to act directly in this matter, let us exert ourselves to so form public sentiment, that this state of affairs must cease to exist here. You have all inferred, ere this, to what I refer. You all know of the condition of matters on that part of First street known as 'the row.' You have heard it discussed on the streets and you have read of it in the daily press. You know from these sources that there is a man in that locality who, like a great ugly spider in his web, lives upon the earnings of the unfortunate women who inhabit that region. These poor creatures pour into this fellow's till the results of their sales of liquors in their houses. He boasts openly that he is beating the city and that he cannot be checked."

"Is not this a blot upon our city? Is not this one of the first directions in which this society should turn its efforts at local reform? And if the city authorities are unwilling to prosecute such disgraceful violation of the spirit of the law, let this club take the matter in hand and drive this man from our midst."

Overcome by this unusual effort, the Sport sat down, and was only revived by the timely arrival of the popcorn and the growler.

"The Devil's Auction."

To-night at Evans opera house W. J. Gilmore's great spectacular play, "The Devil's Auction," will be presented by a splendid troupe of artists. The house will undoubtedly be crowded, as the advance sale of seats has been very large. The performance is bright and entertaining.

In the scenes where the dances hold sway Camis, a new premiere assoluta, makes her appearance. Camis is one of the daintiest of dancers and combines such an easy gracefulness with her difficult steps as to make them appear more easy than they really were. Other persons giving specialties are the Lorellas, an acrobatic trio, who do a clever act; the Bobbies, in a high and lofty tumbling performance, the Teipette family, eight in number, who give one of the most comical of dances. There are numerous others besides these who help to make "The Devil's Auction" complete.

In the play proper there appears George H. Adams as John. There is but one Adams. He is always seen in such plays and he was at his best last night. W. H. Bartholomew gave an exceedingly clever impersonation of the old man, Madelene's father. He showed his versatility in the scene of the Chinese fete afterwards. F. H. Granger was handsome as Corlies, and carried the golden branch to defeat the devil with the skill of an adept. William Ruge was very good as Fortino. Louise Dempsey was given a hearty welcome by the audience, the gallery in particular. She, as the fairy queen, downed Fortino and sent him to the man whom he had been watching was the thief. After running about half a block the thief dropped the beef and disappeared around the corner of Silver street. The piece of meat he attempted to steal weighed 165 pounds.

A STOUT THIEF.

He Attempts to Carry Away a Quarter of Beef.

BUTTE, Jan. 7.—Early last night the proprietor of a butcher shop in Main street near the corner of Mercury, noticed a man hanging about the outside of the place, who acted suspiciously, and he concluded to watch him. Leaving the front of the shop to go back where his desk stood, the butcher lost sight of the man for a moment and when he turned he saw a quarter of beef that had been hanging outside disappearing down the street. The butcher gave chase and saw that the man, whom he had been watching was the thief. After running about half a block the thief dropped the beef and disappeared around the corner of Silver street. The piece of meat he attempted to steal weighed 165 pounds.

The Newsboys' Contest.

BUTTE, Feb. 7.—James McLaughlin has again assumed the lead in the STANDARD's newsboys' race, and is to-day eight ahead of Bat Leary. The latter leads Mike Leary by 65 copies, and he is 14 ahead of Jack Sullivan. Ed Colbert is fifth, 20 behind Sullivan.
